

The Trustworthy Word, Week 27
Tyndale and the King

Act 1: Henry VIII Sets His Sights on Tyndale

Thomas More

“I perceived the man to be exceedingly altered ... in such wise that water stood in his eyes, and answered, ‘What gracious words are these! I assure you,’ said he [Tyndale], ‘if it would stand with the king's most gracious pleasure to grant only a bare text of the scripture to be out forth among his people, like as is put forth among the subjects of the emperor in these parts, and of other Christian princes, be it of the translation of what person soever shall please his majesty, I shall immediately make faithful promise never to write more, not abide two days in these parts after the same: but immediately to repair unto his realm, and there most humbly submit myself at the feet of his royal majesty, offering my body to suffer what pain or torture, yea, what death his grace will, so this be obtained. And till that time, I will abide the asperity of all chances, whatsoever shall come, and endure my life in as many pains as it is able to bear and suffer.’”

Daniell, David (1994-11-30). William Tyndale: A Biography (Kindle Locations 4384-4392). Yale University Press. Kindle Edition.

Stephen Vaughan

Act 2: Tyndale Sets His Prayers on Henry VIII

Thomas Poyntz

Henry Phillips

“[Tyndale was] brought forth to the place of execution, was there tied to the stake, and then strangled first by the hangman, and afterwards with fire consumed, in the morning at the town of Vilvorde, A.D. 1536: crying thus at the stake with a fervent zeal, and a loud voice, ‘Lord! open the king of England's eyes’.”

Daniell, David (1994-11-30). William Tyndale: A Biography (Kindle Locations 7740-7744). Yale University Press. Kindle Edition.

Act 3: Tyndale Sees His True King

The Trustworthy Word, Week 27
Tyndale and the King

Act 1: Henry VIII Sets His Sights on Tyndale

Thomas More

“I perceived the man to be exceedingly altered ... in such wise that water stood in his eyes, and answered, ‘What gracious words are these! I assure you,’ said he [Tyndale], ‘if it would stand with the king's most gracious pleasure to grant only a bare text of the scripture to be out forth among his people, like as is put forth among the subjects of the emperor in these parts, and of other Christian princes, be it of the translation of what person soever shall please his majesty, I shall immediately make faithful promise never to write more, not abide two days in these parts after the same: but immediately to repair unto his realm, and there most humbly submit myself at the feet of his royal majesty, offering my body to suffer what pain or torture, yea, what death his grace will, so this be obtained. And till that time, I will abide the asperity of all chances, whatsoever shall come, and endure my life in as many pains as it is able to bear and suffer.’”

Daniell, David (1994-11-30). William Tyndale: A Biography (Kindle Locations 4384-4392). Yale University Press. Kindle Edition.

Stephen Vaughan

Act 2: Tyndale Sets His Prayers on Henry VIII

Thomas Poyntz

Henry Phillips

“[Tyndale was] brought forth to the place of execution, was there tied to the stake, and then strangled first by the hangman, and afterwards with fire consumed, in the morning at the town of Vilvorde, A.D. 1536: crying thus at the stake with a fervent zeal, and a loud voice, ‘Lord! open the king of England's eyes’.”

Daniell, David (1994-11-30). William Tyndale: A Biography (Kindle Locations 7740-7744). Yale University Press. Kindle Edition.

Act 3: Tyndale Sees His True King